Bearded Dragon

Bearded Dragon

What is a Bearded Dragon?

Bearded Dragons come in two species in the New Zealand pet trade; Inland Bearded Dragons and Eastern Bearded Dragons. Both come from Australia, the Eastern Bearded Dragon coming from Central and Eastern Queensland / New South Wales, the Inland Bearded Dragon coming from central Australia (Queensland, Northern Territory and South Australia) Bearded Dragons are lizards, the most common type of reptile in the pet trade.

Appearance and Characteristics

Bearded Dragons are characterised by their leathery, scaly skin with rows of lateral spines, as well as spines on their throat. These aren't sharp to the touch, despite how they look. Both the inland and eastern bearded dragons look very similar, the inland bearded dragon is the most

Blue Tongued Skink

Handling

Blue Tongue Skinks have a very pleasant disposition and are very unlikely to bite. They should, however, be handled frequently to prevent returning to their wilder disposition. They shouldn't be kept out of the enclosure for too long a period as they can become too cold if left out for too long. They do have a genuinely good disposition however and make great pets if their requirements are met.

UVB Bulb
This ExoTerra UVB 100 bulb is perfect for Blueys. It is designed to give enough vitaman D3 that would be equivilent to that of a reptile in the Australian suburban area.

Heat Bulb
This Arcadia 80w Deep Heat Projector does the best job at getting heat through the lizard's body.

Light Fittings
You are going to need 2 of these medium sized glow light
